Without landmark, without a guide or ritual, four young people between 15 and 20 years old search blindly for a meaning in their lives. At the dawn of adulthood, they have vertigo. Their conclusion is clear: life is difficult. And their many questions about life, death and suffering remain unanswered. Yet these young people are free to choose, but this new freedom provokes in them an unfulfilled void. A great thirst brings them to follow unknown paths, little frequented by the youth of today...?
