By overturning the Roe v. Wade decision, the U.S. Supreme Court has taken a fifty-year leap backward by removing the legal protection of abortion. This regression is indicative of a disturbing polarization. Troubled by this historic shift, filmmaker and feminist Léa Clermont-Dion questions: How will this legal setback impact us?

This documentary explores the rise of anti-abortion groups. The mobilization is happening here and now. Throughout the narrative, the filmmaker also presents the feminist and pro-choice response that is organizing across the country. Léa Clermont-Dion delivers yet another hard-hitting film, combining an embodied analysis with her distinctive critical perspective.
